THAILAND

- The Port Authority of Thailand (PAT) is a government agency of Thailand responsible for the regulation and governance of the ports of Thailand, primarily the ports of Laem Chabang and Bangkok Port , the country's two largest. PAT operates Thai ports in conjunction with public companies including Hutchison Ports Thailand and PSA International .
- The PAT was founded by the Port Authority of Thailand Act 1951 as an autonomous government agency under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Transportation and Communications. In 1961 construction was begun on the port of Laem Chabang, due to overcrowding at Bangkok Port. By 1997 Laem Chabang had become the country's busiest seaport. In 2000 the Port Authority of Thailand was converted from a government agency to a state corporation under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Transport by amendment to the Port Authority of Thailand Act 1951.
